Market Review

Global equities were mixed in September 2026. Across major geographic regions in US dollar ("USD") terms, Japan and the US modestly outperformed while Europe and China A-shares lagged. The US labour market showed signs of softening. Non-farm payrolls rose by 29,000, below expectations, while the unemployment rate edged up to 4.2%. Business activity nevertheless remained robust, with the S&P Global Manufacturing Purchasing Managers' Index ("PMI") at 55.9 and the S&P Global Services PMI at 58.8, both indicating continued expansion. Inflation remained a focus for policymakers. At its September 2026 meeting, the US Federal Reserve ("Fed") raised the federal funds rate by 25 basis points to a target range of 3.75%-4.00% and noted that inflation remained elevated. Higher oil prices and resilient economic activity contributed to expectations that interest rates could remain restrictive for longer.

Eurozone economic activity remained resilient during the month, with the HCOB Manufacturing PMI and the Services PMI, both in expansionary territory, and the Citi Economic Surprise Index remaining positive as data broadly exceeded expectations. Inflation pressures remained elevated, with headline consumer price inflation rising to 3.2% year-on-year in the September 2026 flash estimate, partly reflecting higher energy prices. The European Central Bank ("ECB") raised its deposit facility rate by 25 basis points to 2.50% at its September 2026 meeting and reiterated its data-dependent approach. ECB Chief Economist Philip Lane noted that a second wave of energy price increases, spanning both oil and gas, is expected to keep inflation higher and more persistent than initially anticipated.

Fixed income markets weakened in September 2026 as government bond yields moved higher. The rise in yields reflected a combination of central bank tightening, elevated inflation concerns and stronger-than-expected economic activity in several regions.

Commodity performance was mixed. Oil prices rose sharply amid escalating geopolitical tensions in the Middle East, with US military strikes on Iranian oil tankers and attacks on a key Saudi export pipeline constraining supply and driving Brent crude up approximately 14% during the month, while gold fell as higher yields and a stronger USD weighed.

Market Outlook

The Underlying Fund Manager remains cautiously constructive on equities over the medium term, supported by resilient earnings growth in major developed markets and continued economic expansion in both the US and Eurozone. However, the investment environment has become more complex following the Fed's unanimous decision to hike and its hawkish forward guidance, combined with the ECB's continued tightening cycle. One risk factor to monitor is the trajectory of energy prices. The ongoing US-Iran conflict continues to disrupt global oil supply, sustaining inflationary pressures that may compel central banks to tighten further than markets currently anticipate, with a prolonged period of elevated yields potentially weighing on rate-sensitive equity sectors and compressing valuations.

Given the wider range of potential macroeconomic and market outcomes, broad diversification across regions and sectors, active management and disciplined risk management remain key to navigating the evolving investment landscape.
